Izu Peninsula Geopark

Did you know that the formation of the Izu Peninsula is completely different from other parts of Honshu (the Main Island of Japan)? In prehistory times (about 20 million years ago), Izu Peninsula was once a submarine volcano group in the Pacific Ocean to the far south of Honshu. This volcanic group moved northward with the Philippine Plate and then collided with Honshu to form the peninsula. There are more than 300 precious geo-points showing this geologic evidence, most of which are tourist spots.

Check Out Geo

A considerable portion of the city of Mishima sits on the lava streams of Mt. Fuji. You can see up close very rare shaped rocks such as the cross-section of lava streams at the North Exit of JR Mishima Station (less than a minute walk) and the ropy lava and lava tunnel in Rakujuen at the South Exit (5 min. walk), which almost allows us to forget the fact that we are in front of a shinkansen station.

Rakujuen (Mishima City): Tour held every day is recommended.

North Exit of Mishima Station (Mishima City): Underneath the elevated railway tracks of the shinkansen, you can observe the lava.

Tensodo (Nishi-Izu Town): A cave created by waves (Sea cave).

All Day Geo

If you have a whole day, why not make a little side trip to Nishi-Izu and Minami-Izu? Magnificent landscapes, created by submarine volcanos and erosion, await your discovery, including Dogashima, Senkanmon and Cape Ai-ai.

Geo Side Trip

If you have half a day, why not enjoy a side trip to Ito and Shuzenji? You can climb Mt. Omuro, which has the appearance of a serving of pudding, by lift and observing the landscape from an altitude of 580m is fantastic. At Asahi Falls, cool water flows down in beautiful columnar joints providing refreshing relief.

Mt. Omuro (Ito City): A mountain with a beautiful silhouette of a mild curve like a turned-down bowl.

Asahi Falls (Izu City): A shape formed by cooled magma.

Senkanmon (Matsuzaki Town): The name was so given because it was worth the visit paying 1,000 kan.

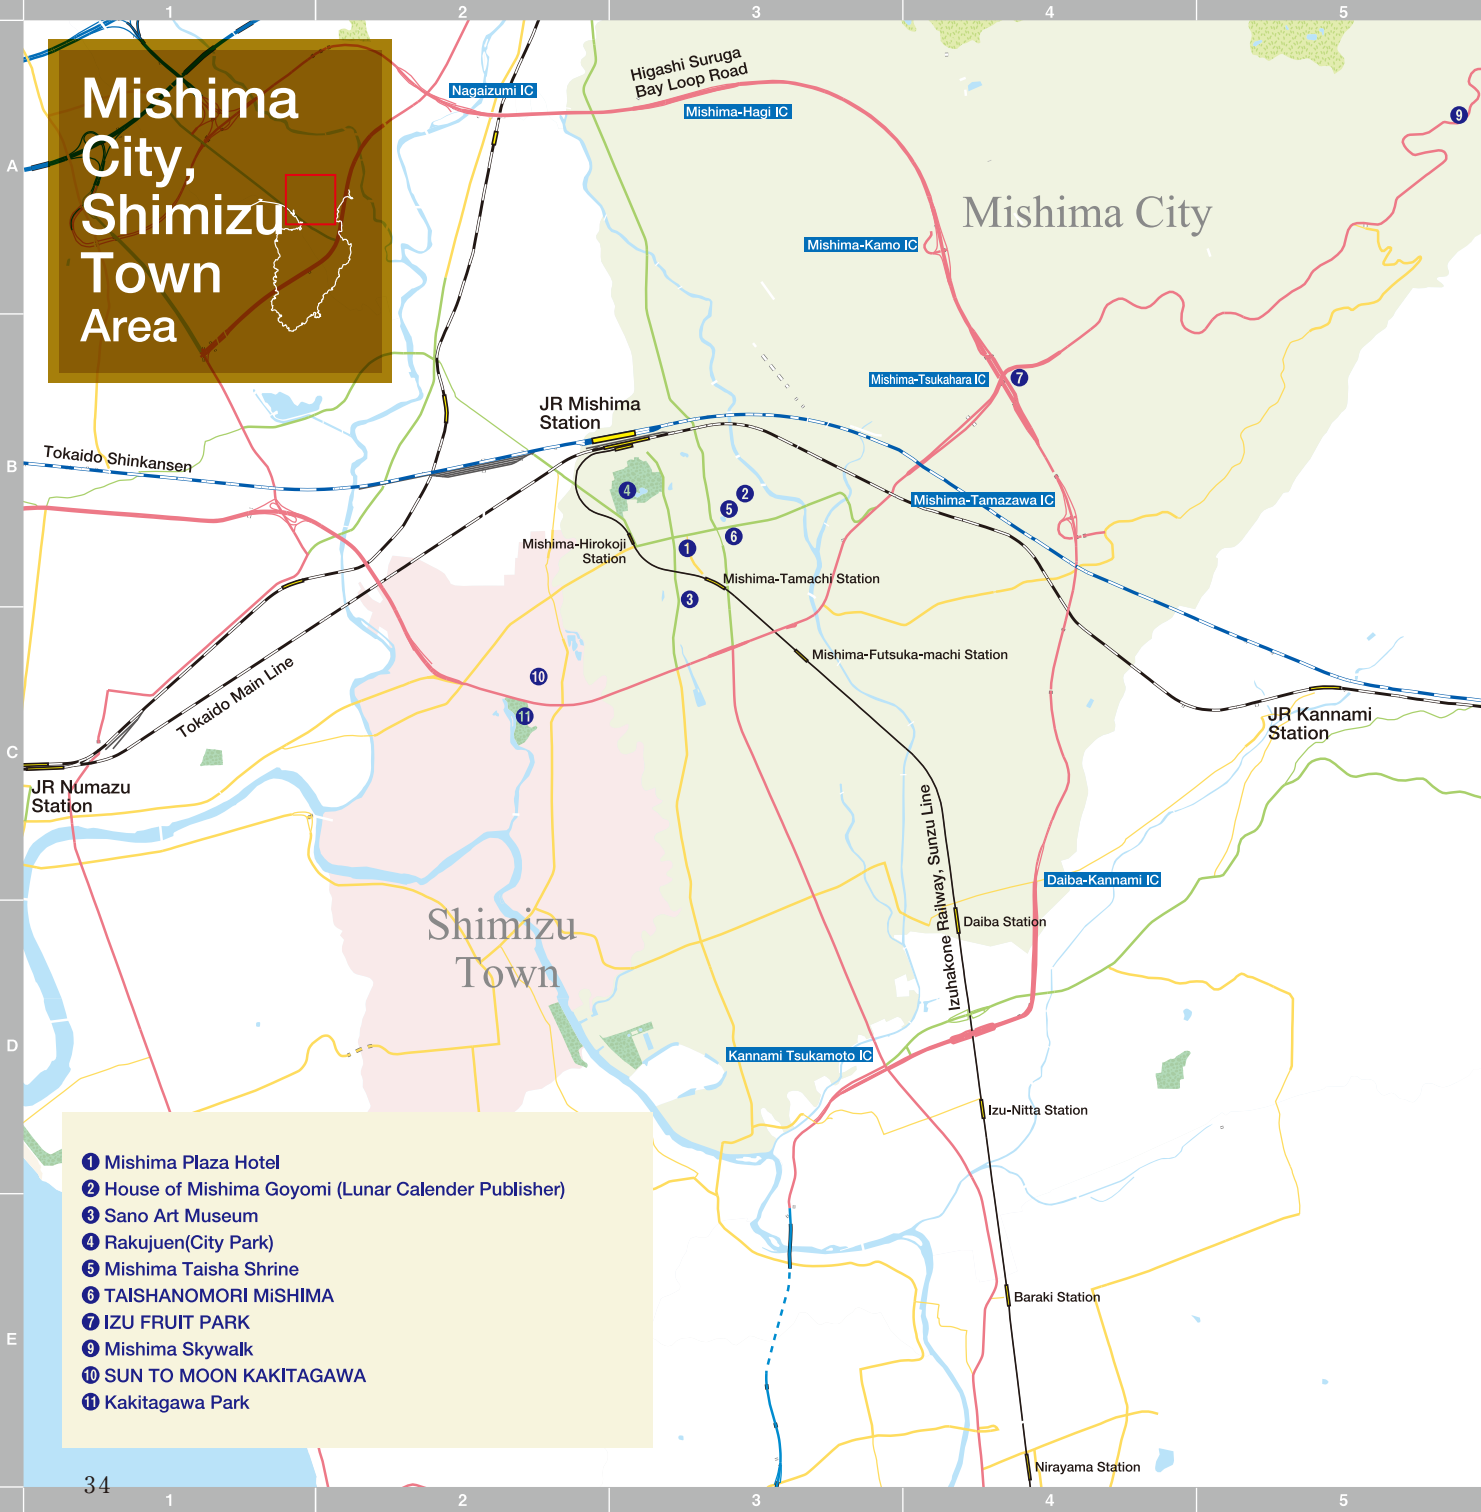

Cape Ai-ai (Minami-Izu Town): Splendid scenic spot overlooking a large ocean, various rock formations, large and small cliffs.
